ported for the Alexandria GAZETTE.) The Woodlawn Farmers' Club met at the residence of Courtland Lukens on the 1st of October, President Pierson in the chair.

When the minutes of last meeting were read Prof. Mason said there was an error be would like to to correct. Smithsonian "In-Hats and Gents' Furnishings, stitute" should be "Institution." This was a point Prof. Henry used to be very tena-$2.55 clous about. Smithson's will reads "an in-3 24 stitution for the diffusion of knowledge out all nature between these laws; for in-5 10 among men."

The subject left over from last meeting, G 25 The subject left over from last meeting, 7 49 "The improvement of the road to Alexandria," was taken up and discussed at some

C. Lukens read an article from the Virginia Home and Farm in relation to road 13 50 working. The new road law now in force 21 00 in this county provides for the levying of 25 00 additional taxes, and it was thought the law well executed would result in substantial improvement.

Charles Gibbs was encouraged to persevere with the subscription by parties along the route for the purpose of graveling and, in conjunction with the road commissioners, to get the road in good shape for winter

James W. Roberts then read the critical report, in substance, es follows: This farm that are so familiar to us and varying ac is located on the Mt. Vernon avenue extended, about eight miles from Alexandria, and will, of course, be very convenient to Washington when that great thoroughfare is completed. On approaching the residence they were struck with the extreme neatness of the lawn and fercibly reminded of their own shortcomings in that respect, but with front gates, and, in fact, the whole fence in front of the house might be dispensed with to advantage by adding to the beauty of the place and removing the necessity of ex-ertion on the part of the committee in opening the gates, as some of them were born tired. A herd of five jerseys first gained their attention, about thirty head of thoroughbreds and grades principally the former—making a herd of which any one might be proud. They are headed by a very fine specimen of his race that they would think worthy of a premium at any fair. One animal at the late fair at Rockville, to the contrary notwithstanding. Some of those who were there will under-tand this.) The cows did not seem to be cullering from dyspepsia rather to their sur-prise when they thoughs of what our bost had heretoter told them in regard to his manner of feeding much and often. This, they crought, adding to the labor of caring for them and not so good for the animal as two or three good feeds a day and plenty of time to sleep. The permanent pasture on which they were feeding showed close work and they thought would be benefitted by some drain tile properly placed. They also thought a good dressing of lime would be

A field of about 22 acres of corn showed a very fine crop of fedder and a fair crop of care, but not in proportion to the fodder. This, no doubt, is owing to the drought, but the corn being planted in drills suggested the thought whether the crop of ears would not have been larger if the corn had been planted in hills and worked both ways. They took exception to his method of sowing some dust and fertilizers on the sod and plowing it under for corn as being a waste. Most leading farmers advise keeping them near the surface as they work down fast enough. They were especially interested in the result of this wheat field on account of the application of lime it received a year ago. They were inclined to criticize his drilling up and down hill instead of cross-wise as more apt to gully and wash out. Our host had become disheartened in sow-ing corn ground in wheat from successive failure, and will sow oats on all of it in future, having done so profitably on a part for many years past. The farm buildings and fences were all in good order and implements mostly housed. The overflowing barns, as evidenced by the hay stacked and sold, gave proofs of good crops of grass. After supper Prof. Mason gave an inter esting lecture on the cause of the change of colors in the autumn leaves. He began by saying: "We often hear a great deal said about the irrevocable laws of Nature; whereas Nature's operations are a continued setting at defiance of those same laws. There is a constant warfare through stance, the law of gravitation is being constantly broken and set aside by that of capillary attraction. Again, whenever the water rises in a pump or mercury in a bar-ometer the law of gravitation is suspended. The structure of trees and planta is composed of innumerable minute cells, which have the mysterious power of drawing the liquid to the extremities of the branches which form the green leaves. This goes on us long as the conditions are favorable during the long days while the sun has full power but as the nights become longer than the days one law is set aside and another asserts itself; a different material from Nature's laboratory is deposited in the leaves and the hectic flush of decay ensues, caus-ing the leaves to take on the beautiful hues ent kinds of trees -- a mystery not yet fully understood." Professor Mason made the subject very interesting and received the thanks of the company at its close.
